Public Health Workforce Development Needs Assessment

SF State and BARHII are co-hosting a session on the workforce development needs in Bay Area public health departments. The session will also focus on anticipated vacancies, the necessary skills, and which position classes need more diverse candidates. This session will create a workforce development needs statement for the public health workforce in the Bay Area, with a focus on health equity. It can support local public health training programs to better meet Bay Area public health department needs.

Co-facilitators:

- Renae Alvarez, BARHII Program Manager for Health Equity
- R. David Rebanal, DrPH, MPH, Assistant Professor, Department of Health Education, College of Health & Social Sciences, San Francisco State University

Objectives:

- Gather a baseline understanding of the current state of public health workforce development needs for the Bay Area
- Explore how SF State and other Universities can support a pipeline of workforce competencies that match emergent needs of local public health departments
- Inform local public health workforce training development
